the modern student is not unlike a modern painting
the first impression of either is one of complexity or even confusion however
both are contemporary products of our current society
the evolution of a society affects the personality of an individual and results in a new and different personality and art expression
in a modern painting
the various forms and shapes used create a pattern which becomes the dominating theme of the painting
the modern student forms and shapes his opinions from a complexity of ideas
and creates a pattern which becomes his guide to the future
a modern painting changes its two-dimensions through the use of perspective
which results in depth
the current student broadens his mind through education which results in a wider perspective and greater depth of understanding the composition of a modern painting has all of the important artistic qualities of the past
plus the current means of expression
the composition of the current student includes all the important basic elements of the past
plus the effects of our constantly changing society

*We, the class of 1953, dedicate this book to all those people who have made sacrifices
that we may enjoy life.*

SENIOR FAREWELL

Good-bye Lowell High, Farewell dear old school,
And thanks for everything, especially for the tool.
The tool of education, to answer our call,
The call of the future, that beckons to us all.

So-long to the faculty, who's been so patient and
kind;
In helping us develop our character as well as our mind.
We're sorry for the trials and tribulations we've caused, too.
If you find it hard forgiving us; think back, when it
could've been you.

We say good-bye to those crowded halls,
And to the marred and battered walls.
We've treated you pretty rough we know,
For this we apologize, as we go.

So from the class of fifty-three
To all our friends and faculty;
Yes, from the Seniors, to all Lowell High
We send Best Wishes and say Good-bye.

SENIOR PROPHECY

In our official capacities as: Chief Advisor to No-One, Secretary of Nothing, and President of Vice--commonly known as Peev., Evelyn Anderson of the G. O. P., Edna Rae Powell of the Prohibitionists, and Jo Westphal of the Democrats, respectively, have decided to combine forces in a whistle stop campaign for our candidate for the lowest office in the land--the honorable Joe McDookes.

We boarded our special train in Washington. We had drawing room reservations and when we opened our door we found Jack Bales, the terror of the railways, waiting for us. Jack lined us up against the wall and took all of our valuables--even Evelyn's treasured "I Like Ike" button. He told us that after Sharon Johnson and Mary Fuller left him to become missionaries, he'd become a gunman and only terrorized women to get revenge against Mary and Sharon. He also mentioned that Jane Sayers, who had been Dick Strickland's doll, also had heard the call and was a missionary in Siberia. After Jack finally left us Edna Rae fainted, so Evelyn called for the porter who turned out to be Wayne Elliott. After many attempts he finally brought Edna Rae to, just as the train stopped at the first stop on our tour. We were greeted at the station by a crowd of celebrities who gave us a grand ovation led by Forbes Fairchild, Hollywood's greatest lover since John Barrymore. We spied in the crowd such well knowns as Betty Jo Wilson, the Jenny Lind of '96, James DeWitt, who had just re-opened Barnum's museum and was appearing as Tom Thumb, Elaine Bunte, star of stage, screen, and television, and Mary Berg, who was waiting for her train to Chicago where she was billed to appear at Minsky's with her novelty act. We pushed through the crowd and almost fell on the soapy floor. Among the suds we saw Joan Erb scrubbing. Her worthless husband, Bill Elliott, bought horses with all the money she made and beat her--or so she said. We finally got through the crowd and into a cab; we directed the cabbie--Janet McCammack, to the Corning Hotel, owned by Roger Corning. We checked in, and the bell boy, Jack Nance, took our bags. Our rooms were next to those of Dick Norlin and his blushing bride, Ann Pennington. Dick and Ann had wedded on a spur of the moment decision after a whirlwind courtship which lasted ten years.

After a brief caucus in our rooms we went down to the Purple Room for dinner. There we saw Calvin Musch, the chef--he always was good at cooking up things. Near our table was Carter Holth, the famous American flying ace, and his date, Anna Morris, the greatest driver ever to hit the Indianapolis Speedway. Anna had won the "500" race for ten consecutive years. When we finished our dinner we strolled to Carter and Anna's table. They told us that they were going to visit the new girls' home a few miles out of town, and asked if we would like to join them. We said that we would and Anna drove us out there. What a ride!! We were admitted to the home by a flirtatious matron. She had a saucy little red curl sticking out from under her cap. At closer glance we recognized her pious face as that of Red Nomanson. Elaine told us that it was very hard to conform with the rules of the home and that she had found it necessary to form rules of her own. We were guided around the home by a trio of girls--Mary Ann Bobola, Mary Schreiber, and Margie Hardesty. At her first opportunity Edna Rae phoned Mac the Hack to come out and get us, as none of us could stand the thought of another ride with Anna. Mac the Hack drove us back to the hotel. In the morning we addressed a crowd at the train depot and left town. Our Next stop was only four hours away, so we didn't have much time to caucus. The train stopped and we stepped out onto the train platform and began our speeches, only to have rotten fruit hurled at us. Edna was hit!! After dark we left the depot, and rushed Edna over to Hayden, Hayden, and Hayden, world famous dress shoppe. Nothing but French-English-American creations. Reid chose the color for her, Carol measured her, and Jennie sewed the dress; an hour later we left the shoppe. Edna had a complete custom-styled outfit!

We decided to go to the notorious Dick's Place, owned and operated by Dick Strickland. It had formerly been Jane Hutton and Doris Werblo's, but when competition became too great, Jane and Doris were forced to sell. At Dick's we were served by Lyla Trimble, Dick's best waitress, who disclosed to us that the food had been concocted by Dick's chef, Leonard Weddle. Leonard's hobby, it seemed, was painting pink elephants--he'd never painted one though.

The floor show finally began. The chorus girls, managed by Dean Toney, couldn't dance, but what an act! Among the chorus girls we recognized Carmen Swider, Bernadette Williamson, Lou Edith Scott, and Gretchen Schweitzer. Featured in the show were Emanuel Taylor and Zsa Zsa Kretz (Jack and Clara changed their names for professional reasons). When the show was over, the band, led by John Kirkus, began to play safe dance music, a suave young man, who we immediately recognized as John Robert Tyler, asked Evelyn to dance. Later she told us that John Robert was a professional dancer and that she had to pay him for the dance.

In the end we were shown out of the place by a professional bouncer and wrestler, Vernon Wietbrock, who's last match had been with Leon Clinton, the husband of the Lower Slobdovian Ambassador, Mary Ann Collins.

When we got back to the station there were a number of reporters waiting for us. They asked us quite a few embarrassing questions, but amid the hem's and ah's, we recognized several of our former classmates, including Brad Hinton, the world's most famous reporter, and Berniece Herron, the author of many best sellers. She and the brilliant lecturer, Betty June Wilson, had collaborated on a number of fine books. When the reporters were finished, we boarded the train to our next stop-- Nome, Alaska. We arrived at Nome late in the evening and were immediately ushered to the Silver Dollar Saloon, run by Klondike Pat and Mike. We recognized them as Pat O'Connell and Arnold Patz (Arnold thought Mike a more wordly name than Arnold). Pat told us that they had been "prospecting" since they were in Alaska. Helen Reagan was the only entertainment that they had, but she was great--trained seals no less! Evelyn stood up and addressed the crowd, after which we boarded the train to Hawaii. On the way we decided that it had been silly to let Alaska into the Union since the only ones there were Pat, Mike, Helen, and the seals. We hoped it hadn't been as fruitless to let Hawaii join. The new trans-world highway and rail line was engineered and constructed by Charles Wismler and Lonnie Wilson. We found it was also equipped with the Olympic trans-world foot-race track. While riding along we saw a streak of light pass by the train on the race track. We learned later from the new porter, Henry Matury, that it was Norbert Jung, the world's Olympic star who was breaking all records by running at a speed exceeding 200 miles per hour.

When we landed at Hawaii we were greeted by the Hawaiian Ambassador to the world, John Schrum. John had won this post when he taught the Hula to the Hula Hula girls. His wife, Connie Miller, was back in the states managing the pickle factory; she did a good job pickling. John introduced us to a number of Hawaii's great? including Mary Camus, the great? she was great? John then took us over to our hut. Our hut was next to that of the battling Kenny Johnsons! Kenny's spouse, Nancy Jellyman, and he had just collaborated on a sequel to Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends And Influence People." Their book is entitled "How To Lose Friends Without Really Trying." While in Hawaii, we visited with Art Beckman and bought one of his marvelous bulldogs. He had been breeding them for years. It seems his interest in bulldogs had been born during his senior year at Lowell.

When leaving Art's establishment, we ran into Marilyn Buche playing solitaire in the middle of the busiest intersection in the islands. Marilyn is the world's champion solitaire player.

After a brief tour of the islands and various brief speeches, we said good-bye to Hawaii.

The next stop on our tour was Cedar Lake, the Mediterranean of the United States. We addressed a huge crowd at the home of the man who had done so much for Cedar Lake, C. A. Gross. We used to know C. A. as Teddy, but since his rise to fame his wife, Roberta, the former Bonnie Rae Hands, who used to model for toothpicks after completing the starvation diet she began during her senior year, convinced him that his real initials, C. A., were more dignified than Teddy. We thought her quite right. After the crowd had left, C. A. showed us around his estate; glamour lovelies everywhere. We saw Barbara Schutz and Wanda Mott playing tennis with Bill Hurr and Herby Hall, but that was all the action we saw. Later at a cocktail party in our honor Ted introduced us to Bernardine Murray, the much quoted columnist, Eileen Hoynes and Carol Huebsch, authors, Joan Pilch, the famous critic, and Louise Kroll and Nancy Ross, who we remembered as the class poetesses when we graduated.

The last stop on our tour is Lowell, crossroads of the county. Lowell really has grown; it's even added Dorothy Stark's two way stretch girdle shop to its list of businesses. We addressed a crowd exceeding 100,000,000 at the new high school, founded by Byron Kusanke, who made his million when he stole Roy Keith's invention of a hydraulic hoist two feet high, which shoots water up sixteen feet. Byron passed it off as his own invention, and made a fortune, but Roy is penniless.

On the school's attendance list we saw the names of Francis Eberle, and E. J. Fredregill, who through rank carelessness had gotten themselves to fifty years of hard labor, under Miss Baughman.
